Interview with a "Professional" Holidaymaker – Audioscript 2

Today we are talking to a person whose job is … being on holiday! Sarah Templar, from Manchester, graduated in English Literature but worked as a teacher for only two years, because she wanted to travel! She has been working for the magazine "Holidays!" for ten years. She travels and writes reports on her experiences. Sounds fantastic, doesn't it?

Q. Good morning Sarah, can you give us some advice on how to make the best out of a holiday?
A. Good morning Kathy, yes, sure, with pleasure. I think that rule number one must be: select what you want to do.

Q. What do you mean exactly?
A. I mean, try and decide on a couple of destinations: you don't want to waste time moving from one place to another and visiting things quickly! I remember one of my very first journeys, I was visiting so many different things and eventually I forgot even seeing them and I didn't buy any gift for my mum, who was not particularly happy!

Q. Got it. Rule number two?
A. Light travelling. Your luggage and your backpack must contain what you need for two or three weeks, not your whole wardrobe!

Q. Yes, I know people who carry heavy, huge pieces of luggage! Incredible! So light travelling. Then?
A. Plan your holiday but do not plan everything, find the right balance. Planning is great to avoid misunderstandings, wasting time, money, etc. but surprises may be pleasant, too! I remember visiting some amazing places that were not originally on my schedule, and thinking "I was very lucky, the inconvenience actually made me see this"!

Q. I know what you mean, unpredictable events may be positive, at times!
A. Absolutely! Once I was visiting Mount Athos, in Greece. I was enjoying my tour very much and I had planned every day for four days. Then they cancelled my flight back from Athens to London, for some reason, and put it off until the following afternoon. I was forced to stay on Mount Athos longer than expected and I thought "what am I going to do one more day here, I've seen everything?".

Q. So? What happened?
A. Well, "I've seen everything" was only my belief: that morning, talking to another visitor, I found out that one of the monasteries kept an outstanding collection of ancient Greek icons. They rarely show it, but that very day there was a special exhibition! I couldn't believe it! I immediately walked to the monastery, together with that well-informed visitor, and enjoyed an absolutely impressive example of religious art!

Q. And all because of a flight cancellation! One more recommendation?
A. Yes Kathy. My last recommendation is: do not visit only the main attractions, that is the places where all tourists usually go. I used to do it too, but then I realised that places off the beaten track are usually less crowded, more peaceful and they may hide wonderful gems!
